

Collection

Users can Collect posts into a printable, sortable format. Collections are a good way to organize posts for quick reading. A Collection must be created to tag posts. More Help

Thread: What is the future of religion? Posted Date: August 26, 2020 2:01 PM
Post: What is the future of religion? Status: Published
Author:  Myranda Molina

Religion has been around for centuries and i believe it will be around for centuries more. As times change and become more modern, it's safe to say religion will do the same. As religion is passed down within families, there could be new branches of current religions that form to implement more modern ideas and morales. Considering how much technology is apart of our lives, followings can begin to form online and make things much easier to get the word out on brand new religions..

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Question 2: What is the future of religion? Posted Date: August 26, 2020 1:11 PM
Post: Question 2: What is the future of religion? Status: Published Author:  Joshua Gonzales

From my point of view, I am convinced that the future of religion would look the same, however there will be new groups of religions that will eventually start off small but will grow larger as time passes on. Religion will still be important in the society of the future. Religion in general is still relevant in the modern world, without religion we would have never have the cultures that we have established in many different countries of the world. Without religion, we would never have the learning of race in religion, traditions, or the holidays that we celebrate. Religion will still be relevant within the next 1000 years years, I can imagine that the groups of Islam and Christianity will still be one of the highest religions in the world within the next 1000 years and the development of new religions is growing. I would imagine that within 1000 years, there is still going to be peace and establishment of harmony in the Middle East with the Muslims towards the western religions and that all religions of the world can finally be co-existed with each other without any wars or hatred towards each other.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: The Future of Religion Posted Date: August 26, 2020 11:26 AM

← OK

Post: RE: The Future of Religion Status: Published
Author:  Destiny Anguiano

I also believe that religions will be inclusive in the future. Society grows as well as the mindsets of devout religious people. Open mindedness will definitely be a factor in how religions will evolve. I don't think they'll ever disappare because ike you said, it provides comfort.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Question 2 Posted Date: August 26, 2020 11:21 AM
Post: Question 2 Status: Published
Author:  Destiny Anguiano

Religion in the future will evolve as the world around us changes. As society grows to be more inclusive, many religions will also do the same rather than be traditionally judgmental to others. Religion is absolutely still relevant in the modern world. In 1000 years, it is hard to predict the relevancy of a religion, but looking back, some religions existed 1000 years ago, what is to say they can't exist 1000 more. Religion in the future will be overpowered by technology. Instead of people using pamphlets, they'll be using tablets.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Question 2 Posted Date: August 26, 2020 8:03 AM
Post: Question 2 Status: Published
Author:  Hannah Johnson

I think religion will continue to evolve as people and cultures change, but I believe there will always be some form of religion. It's possible that religion becomes more obscure and the vast majority of people no longer practice a religion; however, there will always be people who are religious because it will be passed down from generations. Even if there is a time when no one has a religion, people will read history books about religions of the past and maybe get interested and decide to learn more and practice the religion.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Future religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 10:34 PM
Post: Future religion Status: Published
Author:  Laronn Stevens

I believe that religion will modify over time as human consciousness becomes more technologically advanced. As science answer more question to the Universe, more questions will be created but in a more finite setting. This will lead to the unraveling of the mysteries of space and time, disease, and war, making humans believe that they are God*s) themselves or God(s) do not exist. There will still be traditional faith practitioners but not as orthodox of those of our time as we do not see practitioners of our father similar to those a thousand years before us.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: The Future of Religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 9:56 PM
Post: The Future of Religion Status: Published
Author:  Trey Dona

In my opinion, religion is not relevant in the modern world, but in some places like the United States, the fear of losing a "tradition" such as Christianity keeps it relevant and intertwined with government and daily life, even though not all of the United States is religious. Outside of religious hotspots such as the United States or India, I think religion will decline severely over the next 1000 years. If religion is still present in 1000 years, I think it will be an extremely controlling version and cause events such as the Crusades, rather than be a peaceful religion.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 8:28 PM
Post: Religion Status: Published
Author:  Michelle Nguyen

The future of religion is unknown because there are so many traditional values. It is possible for a religion to die and become a myth, while there may be a new religion created tomorrow. Many dominant religions have been evolving, including Christianity. Religions may split into smaller sections and have same morals but different traditions. I believe that religion is still relevant in the modern world because it helps us to teach one another and learn to respect while being compassionate towards one's way of lifestyle. I believe that religions will still be relevant in 1000, despite the growth of Atheism. Habits are hard to break, and traditions will always be passed down. If religion is still present in 1000 years, I hope that it has more unity. I hope that people won't identify themselves with their god, but by their morals and traditions.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 8:28 PM
Post: Religion Status: Published
Author:  Michelle Nguyen

The future of religion is unknown because there are so many traditional values. It is possible for a religion to die and become a myth, while there may be a new religion created tomorrow. Many dominant religions have been evolving, including Christianity. Religions may split into smaller sections and have same morals but different traditions. I believe that religion is still relevant in the modern world because it helps us to teach one another and learn to respect while being compassionate towards one's way of lifestyle. I believe that religions will still be relevant in 1000, despite the growth of Atheism. Habits are hard to break, and traditions will always be passed down. If religion is still present in 1000 years, I hope that it has more unity. I hope that people won't identify themselves with their god, but by their morals and traditions.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: The future of religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 7:01 PM
Post: The future of religion Status: Published
Author:  Kaylee Taylor

I really do not think that religion will ever be something that dies out. It is important to a lot of people and can be a part of their identity as well. Religion is for sure still relevant now and will still be relevant in 1000 years. Religion has been around for thousands of years, what is stopping it from continuing for another 1000. I think it will look a whole lot different in 1000 years as it has changed and evolved so much since it first began.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Q2: the relevance of religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 6:52 PM
Post: Q2: the relevance of religion Status: Published
Author:  Jacob Macias

In today's every changing society, I believe that religion is more important than it ever has been, at least from a core values standpoint, especially with the given cultures and norms of the world today. I believe religion is going to stay relevant for the many centuries to come. It may fade in and out in relevance or importance like it has in the past 1000 years, but I think it will always be there.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Question 2 Posted Date: August 25, 2020 3:18 PM
Post: Question 2 Status: Published
Author:  Alexandria Bermudez

The future of religion will still be some what influential but the traditional structures will not have much of a place in society. Religion still plays a role in modern society it is just on a decline. It is unpredictable to know if religion will still be as relevant as it is now opposed to the future. However, I think that its influence will decline but it will never die.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Q#2-Future of Religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 2:38 PM
Post: Q#2-Future of Religion Status: Published Author:  Ian Karst

Religion is here to stay even for unexplainable answers. There will be more religions in the future because the world changes every decade. I participate in my church livestream every Sunday and even though not everyone thinks about it. Religion is relevant when others need it most. In 1000 years, religion might deviate into how we pray humans who live in space or more fanatic into how people should live in a certain planet.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Question 2 Posted Date: August 25, 2020 2:24 PM
Post: Question 2 Status: Published
Author:  Kimti Bhakta

I believe that religion is still relevant in the modern world. I do think it will still be relevant one thousand years from now but, it will not be the same as it once was. I think that religion has definitely changed but it is still very important to many people in the world. It is more relevant to us today because to us religion is where we get our faith and our beliefs. Our faith helps us with life's difficulties and makes us stronger. In the future religion will look different because even now I myself am a Hindu and my parents and grandparents are also Hindus we all believe in the same religion but I have completely different views from them about our religion. They are far more traditional than I am because they grew up in India where as I grew up in America and they were raised differently than I was.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: The Future of Religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 2:23 PM
Post: The Future of Religion Status: Published
Author:  Bailey Gruber

I believe that religion will still be prominent in 1000 years, the same way that it is prominent in modern times. However, things will most likely start to evolve, just as they always have. There will most likely be many new religions, and some religions that are present today might fade out by then. However, people will still need something to keep them going, and to believe, therefore, I believe that religion is not going anywhere.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Question 2 Posted Date: August 25, 2020 1:50 PM
Post: Question 2 Status: Published
Author:  James Cooley

the future of religion will be the same. The way we pray and ways we worship will always be the same. in the future religion might bring in more believers but i feel it will always be the same.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: The Future of Religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 1:45 PM
Post: The Future of Religion Status: Published
Author:  Cara Garcia

I feel like the future of religion will continue to evolve with the modern world, but at a slower pace; we can see the ways that religion has progressed thus far and though it has come a long way certain beliefs may be left behind. I feel that religion will always be relevant to some because it gives peace of mind to those that question things beyond scientific reason. I think that religion may become less diverse, but more inclusive in the next 1000 years.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Question 2 Posted Date: August 25, 2020 1:35 PM
Post: Question 2 Status: Published
Author:  Makayla Mendoza

Religion has been relevant for over a 1000 years and will continue to be relevant for 1000 more years. Religion is very relevant in the modern world, so much so that it makes up a lot of a country's decisions on their laws and how they operate. Although religion might be relevant in another 1000 years, it will probably look drastically different than it does today. It will probably keep reshaping the way it has been throughout the years.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Discussion #2 Posted Date: August 25, 2020 12:58 PM
Post: Discussion #2 Status: Published
Author:  Gage Martin

Modern religion has changed drastically within the last one hundred years. Although a lot of the same principles are still prevalent, the alteration and adaptation of religious norms have influenced a new type of theological practice. The COVID-19 pandemic has definitely transformed the way religion is practiced. With more churches turning to virtual and socially-distanced services, there is an obvious need for religions to update their practices as technology advances. In the future, society may see the shift to completely technological bible studies, church services, and religious camps. The future of religion is undoubtedly one with the transfer of practice to technology and scientific advancement.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Future of religion Posted Date: August 25, 2020 12:08 PM
Post: Future of religion Status: Published
Author:  Jillian Vasquez

I believe that religion is relevant today and will continue to be relevant in 1000 years. In the modern world and in the future people will still make religion a part of their lives because its nice to believe in something greater however, I do think it will look very different. As time goes by peoples views will shift and become less traditional. For example, my grandparents and I both practice the same religion but have different views on a lot of things the church says. This is because they are older and more traditional and as a young adult I have my own opinions on what the church has to say about certain topics.

(Post is Unread)

Thread: Question 2 Posted Date: August 24, 2020 4:11 PM
Post: Question 2 Status: Published
Author:  Priscilla Fonnegra

The future of religion is close to non existent. Yes, it is still alive today, although society and social media condemn it in a way. For example, it is not "popular" to post about God, the songs that have been released in the past decade are sinful and disregard God, and individuals are afraid to pray in public places, etc. Globally, Christians are being murdered for what they believe in. When my parents were in school, there was a specified time for prayer. Slowly, religion is being eliminated for every day practices or being stripped from individuals freedom. With as much sin and hate has resurfaced recently, unfortunately I believe religion will not be relevant at all in 1,000 years.

(Post is Read)

